THE TALE OF LIFE.

Man is to day what man was yesterday-Will be to-morrow: let him curse or pray, Drink or be dull, he learns not nor shall learn

The lesson that will laugh the world away. The world as gray or just as golden shines, The wine as sweet or just as bitter flows, For you as me; and you, like me, may find Perfume or canker in the reddest rose.

The tale of life is hard to understand; But while the cup waits ready to your hand Drink and declare the summer roses blow As red in London as in Samarcand.

Lips are as sweet to kiss and eyes as bright As ever flattered Omar with delight; English or Persian, while the mouth is fair What can it matter how it says good night? -Justin A. McCarthy.

THE DEPOPULIZATION OF FRANCE France Doomed to Disappear from the Ranks of First Rate Nations. I have cast a rapid glance through about a score of dailies coming from different parts of France. Most of them are dated Friday and Saturday, and there is not one that does not contain the mention of at least two violent deaths. Multiply the papers I have been able to consult by 100, which is a very low computation, and one arrives at a minimum of at least 250 deaths by violence per day. In short, one may take it for granted that the are 50,000 such calamities per annum ; France. I had occasion to remark in my !. letter on the almost stationary state of the population. This, added to other place nomena, leads to but one conclusion: that, in the course of a century, France is doomed to disappear from the ranks of first rate

Of course, nothing is easier than to prophesy where the means of verification must necessarily be wanting. But statistics are very eloquent things, and are, to a great extent, the credentials of the would-be prophet. M. Bertillon, who has just published his annual report to the Paris municipal council, states that there have been close upon 17,000 arrests for vagrancy and mendicity in the capital alone, besides 24,000 for more serious crimes. More than half the culprits, male or female, are under 25 years of age. On referring to M. Bertillon's report for the year 1884, I find that there is an increase of over 4,000 malefactors, without a corresponding increase in the population. I am content to let these figures speak for themselves, but I cannot forbear quoting a conversation I overheard a few months ago, still in connection with this want of increase of the population.

A gentleman that might have sat for the al of Zola's grandfather in "Pot-Bouille" ma ained that France is better off with her ,000 of inhabitants than other countries half the size with the same number. He was evid atly under the impression that the law of a mogeniture prevails everywhere and is applied indiscriminately. "And do you see." be a d, "under such circumstances there is monce one cich in a family and the rest are all poor. order. It is better in France, where every child gets an qual portion of his parents' property. It miles him, if not to do without work, at New lend to look the future in the face without deniety. For my a set I should not like to sec too great an increase of our population." in vain did his interlocutor point out to him that such an increase would necessarily mean the success of France's scheme for colonization. He was not to be convinced, argument had to be given up in despair .- Paris Cor.
